Essay Title: The importance of honesty

Essay:

As a kid, I was taught honesty is one of the most important core value in a friendship and that lies are bad. Growing up, honesty became more than just the truth and I understood how important it is for me and for my character.

Firstly, I have realised what a real friend means. Nowadays, calling someone a friend is easy. If she/he is nice, why wouldn't she/he be my friend? In life, everybody told me a friend is someone you trust and is not letting you down, but I was also told everybody deserves a second chance. In my opinion, a real friend is someone who makes you feel comfortable with who you are and gives you freedom to express your feelings in hard situations. Not someone whom attendance makes you feel like he/she can't be trusted.

Talking about bonds, honesty is the key to open the door to a good relationship with your parents. I'm not the type of "bad child", but I did things after which I felt guilty and so I hid them from my parents. Once in my life, I went to school without my homework done and I still didn't tell them, even though now they'll probably laugh about it. Consequently, in the past few years, I didn't have talks with them about school or times when I hang out with my friends. However, I realised I feel more comfortable when I tell them everything and I am being honest.

Now, let's leave aside small situations which we went through, and think about future. Honesty may seem a little detail in your way to succeed, but actually it is not. A going-on is creating together with someone a family. That person should be your right hand, your breaking down listener and your biggest supporter. For that to happen, he/she should trust you with their whole heart, but also be trusted by you.

The example from which I learned the mindset from the previous paragraph is my parents' relationship. They own a company for more than 10 years and it is quite a success. Just they two, together, made their path to the way they are now. How did they do that? There's only one answer. Honesty. In some situations, both of them had different ideas. If dad didn't trust mom's ideas, if mom didn't trust dad's and if they wouldn't have matched them, then everything would've been a mess, including their relationship.

Honesty is developing not only your character, but also how people see you. The best feeling is to know someone out there trusts you and is sure you won't disappoint them. Even better, is to know you also have someone you won't have thoughts about when you're talking about honesty. I'm only a XX years old girl whose voice isn't loud enough to convince people honesty is an important core value, but I believe people will realise alone after facing betrayals and disappointments.
